COUNTING THE COST OF LIFE INSURANCE

By Neil Cohen

I was flying from Chicago to Boston and had managed to snag an upgrade to business class. Quite unlike the man sitting next to me. He had paid for — and only traveled — business class. He had flown to Chicago that morning, only to learn on his arrival that the sole meeting for which he had flown in had been canceled. I asked him what he did. He sold life insurance, he said. Selling life insurance can be a very lucrative business.

Thinking about life insurance is right up there on people's wish list with wills and reserve army duty in Gaza. Partly because it has pretty morbid associations and partly because it's a complex issue — and most people hate dealing with complex financial issues — and partly because they don't like dealing with their mortality and its consequences.

But anyone concerned with their family's financial future and security must address their life insurance needs. According to Money Magazine in the US, the average American household has about $112,000 in life cover. This may sound a lot, but remember that, as Money Magazine points out, it has to replace lost earnings should a family's breadwinner die.

Any time a salesperson stands to earn a hefty commission from a sale there exists the possibility that the salesperson will sell the product that is best for the salesperson rather than the customer. There have been many cases in the US and the UK of "churning" — encouraging customers to replace (perfectly good) old policies to generate new commissions, and in the UK a number of insurance companies have come under fire for their agents selling policies inappropriate to customers' needs. There is also more pressure to reveal the commissions hitherto hidden in policy costs.

These phenomena have yet to become issues here, though it is surely only a matter of time before they do. Still, there is no reason why you should take an agent's word for how much insurance you need. You can make a rough calculation yourself.

First, add up your current living costs; make sure you include everything — don't forget housing costs, overdraft or credit card interest charges, and add in the cost of replacing services — like child care and cleaning — you or your spouse now provide for free. Don't underestimate these. Add in any major expenditures you anticipate facing, hosting a bar mitzva, for example.

Then, work out how much income the family will be left with should you or your spouse die. That means the surviving spouse's salary, any state or other pension, interest and other investment income, as well as income that would be earned from investing the proceeds of any insurance policies you already own. Don't forget to include training funds and other job-related savings that have accumulated.

Figure you'll earn 5% net on investable cash. Large dollar deposits can earn 6%-plus (tax-free if you're still within your 20 year post-immigration period) while shekel CFI-linked government bonds yield close to 5%.

Then, estimate the shortfall or surplus you'll be left with. If you find that you'll have more income than you need, you may have too much life insurance. Think about cutting your coverage by NIS 100,000 for every NIS 5,000 of surplus income.

If, as is likely, you wind up with a shortfall, calculate the amount of additional insurance you need. For each NIS 5,000 of additional income your spouse will need after your death, buy NIS 100,000 of additional insurance.

If you already have a pension plan, managers' insurance or provident fund savings you should probably take straight risk insurance (where the whole premium is going to buy you life insurance and none of it will go toward savings). This is usually slightly cheaper than "packaged" policies. You will be able to — and should — adjust the sum insured downwards every couple of years as your savings build and you need less income from this insurance policy.

TAXING SPOUSES

The tax laws are especially convoluted when it comes to married couples.

By Jeremy Cohn

Israeli income tax law no longer automatically discriminates against the wife in its treatment of married couples. These days the couple is permitted to choose who will be the "registered spouse," under whose name the file will be administered, and who will be liable for the payment of tax. If they so choose, this decision cannot be changed for five years. If they do not choose, then the authorities will register the couple's higher earner.

In principle — though this is subject to some very valuable exceptions — the couple's joint income is considered for tax purposes as the income of the registered spouse. When this happens, that spouse will be entitled to certain extra credits to set off against his or her tax bill. For example, where the other spouse is dependent upon the registered spouse, the registered spouse will get one credit point — worth an annual NIS 1,322 reduction in their tax bill. Where the other spouse is working, or where the spouses work together, the registered spouse will receive almost as many credit points as if they were being assessed separately.

But there is still a slight difference, which amounts to totally arbitrary discrimination, and this is only the beginning of their woes. Because their income is going to be treated as one income, their total income will take them into the higher tax brackets, rather than each of them starting out at the lowest bracket and then paying in accordance with their individual incomes.

This situation can be avoided where the income of the other spouse is derived from personal exertions (profession, work or business, and certain pensions deriving from these activities), and/or from property that was owned by him or her for at least a year prior to their marriage, or received by way of inheritance even after they were married. In these cases, the other, non-registered, spouse is entitled to demand separate assessment.

THROUGH A GLASS DARKLY

Does anyone really understand the US stock market?

By James K. Glassman

Between the end of November and the middle of May, the Dow Jones Industrial average rose 700 points — up, up, up at an inexorable 45-degree angle on the charts. Then, in one day, the Dow fell 82 points. Why? The truth is that no one knows — just as no one knows why the Dow fell 509 points on October 19, 1987. But ignorance rarely prevents market pundits from offering confident explanations, or newspapers from printing them.

Opined Ed Keely, manager of Founders Growth Fund, on Thursday: "The number one worry is the sustainability of earnings and how strong the economy is." Huh? For months, pundits had been saying the market thinks a weak economy is good. Now it's bad?

The culprit was "profit-taking," said Peggy Farley of Amas Securities, seizing an old chestnut. The market fell "under its own weight," said Dan Bernstein and Ross Waller of Bridgewater Associates, using a popular tauntology.

Even if one or more of these explanations is correct, you have to ask why the market didn't fall earlier — or later. Why, for example, did investors suddenly decide to take profits on May 18, with the Dow up 15 percent for the year and not on April 18, with the Dow up 10 percent? Or on June 18, with the Dow up maybe 20 percent?

There's a good case to be made that the movements of the stock market — and, more importantly, of individual stocks — are essentially random. In that case, trying to explain the ups and downs of share prices is as fruitless an exercise as trying to explain why a particular coin flip ended up tails and not heads.

But even if you don't accept what's called the "random walk" theory, you'll profit as an investor if you learn to ignore the background noise and the fatuous explanations. Tomorrow's fluctuations may not be random, but they are certainly unknowable.

The problem is that stock movements look like they're rational. In his famous 1973 book, A Random Walk Down Wall Street, Burton Malkiel printed a chart that appeared to represent the daily activity of a nicely behaving stock. Actually, the points on the chart were plotted strictly according to the outcome of coin flips.

"The persistence of this belief in repetitive patterns in the stock market is due to statistical illusion," Malkiel concluded.

In other words, even chance events look as though they behave according to clear rules — a notion that has provided comfortable incomes for what Wall Street calls "technicians," who divine the future from formations that appear on stock charts.

In his delightful new book, A Mathematical Reads the Newspaper, John Allen Paulos takes Malkiel a step further, noting "the surprising number of consecutive runs of heads or tails" that result from prolonged random coin-flipping. If you flip a coin each day for five or six years, he says, it's likely that heads will enjoy a winning run for at least 10 days in a row. What a bull market!

"With these random clumping patterns in mind," writes Paulos, "think of the standard pronouncements of newspaper stock analysts."

"The daily ups and downs of a particular stock or of the stock market in general may not be as thoroughly random as these H's and T's are, but it's safe to say that there is an extremely large element of chance involved... One never hears of chance, however, in the neat post hoc analyses that follow each market's close."

What we do know about the market is this: Despite all the human brainpower and whirling computer that have been applied to the task over the decades, no one has been able to predict what it will do over the short term (which I'd define as less than three years).

So why try? At best, worrying about where the market will go next is a distraction — there are better uses for your investment time, like searching for great, undervalued stocks. At worst, such fretting will cause you to sell when you should be holding on for the long term.

As John Vander Vliet of Dean Witter, Reynolds Inc. recently wrote: "Despite an 80 percent five-year advance in 200 growth (mutual) funds measured by Morningstar, the average investor in those same funds suffered a 2.5 percent annual loss."

Why? Because investors tend to panic when they see stock prices dropping. They sell at the wrong time.

It's hardly any wonder. A year ago, for example, analysts from top Wall Street firms turned sour on Johnson & Johnson as the stock dropped below $40 a share, which seemed to be a "support level." But almost immediately after these dire warnings, the stock suddenly turned around and started rising, hitting $67.50 on May 11.

Could anyone have called this about-face? No, but a smart long-term investor could have seen two things in April 1994.

First, that J&J was a magnificent, well-diversified company with talented management; and second, that its stock seemed, if anything, cheap.

At the time, an investor had to pay only $13 to buy $1 worth of J&J's annual profits. This price-to-earnings ratio of 13 was roughly one-third lower than J&J's historic average and one-half the peak in 1992.

Two weeks ago, J&J's stock fell about $5 when analysts became concerned about this year's earnings. If you own J&J, a reassessment makes sense, but you should base your decision on the company's own prospects, not the market's.

Don't get me wrong. I'm not taking the absolutist position that stocks move in totally random ways. History shows that, in the long run, the average stock will produce a return (price gains plus dividends) of 11 percent annually, mainly because the average company's profits rise at about that rate.

Of course, stocks don't rise by 11 percent each and every year, nor do their returns correlate directly to annual corporate profits. The game is not that easy. Here, for example, are the annual returns of the average large stock from 1989 to 1994: up 32 percent, down 3 percent, up 31 percent, up 8 percent, up 10 percent, up 1 percent. This is randomness in action.

And, yes, there are big external forces at work that can lift or depress the prices of stocks, again, over longer periods. Right now, those forces, which are called "secular" in financial jargon, appear positive.

One force for stocks is the political transformation that was evident in last November's congressional elections. Another is a trend toward increased savings by a US population that's getting older. Another is low inflation, as worldwide competition keeps a lid on prices. And a fourth secular force is the management revolution that's sweeping American companies, raising productivity.

While these factors bode well for the market, they can't insure against one-day declines in the Dow of 82 points, or even 509 points. The best advice is not to read too much significance into such drops: Are they harbingers of more troubles or just much-needed breathers?

Paulos writes that, just once, he'd like to hear some pundit answer, "I'm damned if I know."

THE LITTLE GUY FIGHTS BACK

Israel's first class action has just been recognized.

By Allison Kaplan Sommer

For those who regularly watch the evening news, the sight of disgruntled shareholders waving signs and shouting angry slogans across the street from the Tel Aviv Stock Exchange is not unfamiliar. And until very recently, taking to the streets was just about all the small-scale investor could do when he believed he was being treated unfairly by the company he had invested in.

In 1988 the country's securities laws were revised, allowing a disgruntled small investor to file suit against the company.

A claim by a small investor — one without access to a team of corporate lawyers — could be made financially feasible if the court were to recognize it as a class action suit, thereby allowing his attorney to represent a group of disgruntled investors.

The first attempt to get a suit recognized as class action came in 1991. It and 20 other class action claims that followed were rejected by the courts. That all changed two weeks ago when a court recognized a lawsuit as a class action for the first time here.

The action is aimed at a company named Five J Jewelers (Hamisha Yud), its controlling shareholders, managers and other directors. The basis of the suit is an accounting error that occurred at the end of the second quarter of 1993. In the company's second quarter reports, the value of the company's assets was overstated by NIS 595,000 and its profits were similarly misrepresented by NIS 562,000.

The plaintiffs contend they were damaged not only by the fact that an error was made, but by the way the error was handled by the company's management and controlling shareholders. Instead of exposing the accounting mistake immediately after it was discovered, they allege, company management made a decision to conceal the error until several months later, when third quarter results were announced — a delay they allege violated securities law. When those results were announced, the value of the shares plummeted.

The plaintiffs — the Global investment firm and two of its key investors together — purchased NIS 30,000 in stock and options in the company during the third quarter. They are demanding the difference between the price at which they purchased the shares, and what they estimate those shares were actually worth. The class action sought to represent every person who purchased stock in the company between August 9, 1993 and November 28, 1993. The plaintiffs estimate the total damage to all of the shareholders at NIS 10 million.

Herzl Caspi, the attorney who filed the suit for Global, has focused much of his practice in recent years to awakening the class action tool in securities law.

Caspi believes that class action is the only way investors in Israeli companies will ever be able to guarantee that a company's managers and majority shareholders will take their interests into account.

"The firms that are registered and traded on the stock exchange are first and foremost looking out for their benefit," says Caspi. "This is a normal thing to do and no one is against it. But sometimes what benefits the directors, majority holders of the companies and senior management is not always in the interest of the stockholder."

Agencies like the Securities Authority and the management of the Stock Exchange, he says, can only go so far. They can demand that companies adhere to certain regulations. But they do not always have the authority, the resources, or the motivation to go after every company which, when balancing what is best for management and private shareholders, tilts in its own favor.

"Before the class action, there was nothing that could prevent them from doing this, there were few very effective steps that could be taken against these companies. Now at least there is a procedural way to attack bad practices by directors and management. After two years of just filing these cases, I know they are aware of it," he says.

"We don't know for sure that this will change their practices, but we know that while in the past they might have been a lot more willing to take the risk, they are less likely to do so now. The more class actions there will be, the more careful they will be with all of the decisions connected to the rights of public shareholders."

It hasn't been a completely smooth road for the new law or for Caspi. Since the first case in 1991, four attempts at class action were settled out of court and two were rejected by Tel Aviv District Court Judge Elihu Winograd, the same judge who recognized the class action last Tuesday. Both are being appealed to higher courts.

The nature of Winograd's early rejections prevented a lot of plaintiffs from filing. Winograd ruled that in order to ascertain the motivation of the plaintiff, he would have to give records of all stock market activity for the past three years; a revelation few are willing to make. Judge Taigam, also sitting in the Tel Aviv District Court, has recently ruled, though, that investors seeking to file a class action do not need to reveal all this information.

Also, the issue of finding a party-willing to be a plaintiff in a class action is problematic in any country. "You have to find a special person who is ready to go to court and sue not only for his interest but for the interest of the public. Because the damage that one person can have can be a few thousands of shekels. The cost and the time he has to invest in such a case is enormous. So why would most people do it?" says Caspi.

It is no secret that interested attorneys take an active role in initiating such cases. In most of Caspi's cases, the plaintiff has been the firm Magen V'Keshet, in which Caspi himself has an interest. The firm bought small stakes in a large number of the country's public companies, and clearly appears to be set up to pursue claims against them.

Attorneys like Caspi and their practices don't always have the best reputation in any country because they are seen as pouncing on companies and aggressively going after clients.

Such class action suits are considered symptomatic of an over-litigious society. In the US, attorneys are seen as creating these cases not because of concern for the shareholders, but in order to collect fees. Since they collect a percentage of every shareholder's settlement, they often walk away with significantly more money than any single plaintiff.

Here, those raising questions about Caspi's techniques, are, naturally, those lawyers who specialize in defending the companies against the class action suits.

"I can tell you that if I take the 10 lawsuits

I am involved in," says attorney Nir Cohen, who has faced Caspi on a number of these matters, "you see the same names repeated over and over again when you look at the plaintiffs and the attorney. There is certainly a concern they will specialize in launching these suits against companies, and companies will face difficulties because of it."

But Caspi says that companies who deal fairly with their shareholders have nothing to fear. He does not believe the threat of class action will prevent well-run companies from going public. "It will discourage only those companies which are coming to the stock exchange in order to milk the public. If this is one of the main interests of such a firm, maybe the possibility of class action will have an effect on them. But if the main reason they go to the stock market is to raise money from the public to develop their business, then they need not be so aware of it."

As for over-litigating, Caspi says there is no danger of that in Israel, at least in the foreseeable future. "Class action in Israel is still a little baby. And you have to help a little baby grow. We have to establish this tool so that it will be used regularly. Then, of course, we have to make sure it is not used wrongly by plaintiffs or by lawyers or anyone else."

A senior fund manager said that at this point class actions are fairly small beer and have had very limited impact on investors or the companies they invest in.

Dr. Zohar Goshen, a lecturer in corporate law at Hebrew University, says he doesn't believe the numbers of class actions in Israel will reach the proportions they have in the United States, because Israeli law has certain provisions for eliminating frivolous claims that US law lacks.

"In America there is a problem in the law. If you file a class action, the judge is not allowed to look at it and rule whether or not there is merit to the suit. So it is easy to get by with a class action that has no merits at all. In Israel, the law allows the judge to assess the merits of the class action," he says.

Gene Hackman portrayed a lawyer fighting for the underdog in the movie 'Class Action.'

THE US ABUSE AND BACKLASH

Hundreds of lawyers in the US get to the office early each morning just so they can search the Wall Street Journal for companies that have disappointed their shareholders and might be ripe targets for a class action, says Eric Sherby, a US-trained litigator now with the international department of the Yigal Atrian law firm.

"Many of these guys have aunts and nephews and mothers-in-law who have set up trusts which have bought a few shares in hundreds of different companies just so the lawyers have ready access to potential clients on whose behalf they can file class actions," he adds.

What often happens, Sherby says, is that different law firms get into a race over who can be the first to file a suit against a particular company. Recently proposed Republican legislation would, though, crack down on the number of suits a particular entity could file within a given period of time.

On the east coast of the US, many class actions are filed by Jewish firms, according to Sherby, because in the early part of century and even through World War II, Jews were not getting jobs in the major Wall Street law firms. These firms typically represented the major corporations — which would be defendants of class actions — and it was logical that outsiders, the Jewish lawyers, take up the other side.

When a company is sued in a class action in the US, one of the company's primary goals is to make sure that the lawsuit is not certified as a class action. Certification as a class action will make a big difference to the size of the lawyer's fee and the certainty of his receiving it.

However, once a suit has been recognized as a class action, the pressure on the company to settle is much greater than before the suit was recognized as such.

Sherby says it is hard to say the class action procedure has affected the way companies operate. It has, though, spurred them to set up shareholder relations departments which act as sounding boards for shareholders' complaints and try to keep them happy. This is not the only reason for maintaining these departments, but there is definitely a link between the two, he notes.

Sherby says class action suits are unlikely to mushroom here to the extent they have in the US, partly because they are unlikely to prove as lucrative for lawyers, but also because it is much harder for attorneys to solicit business here. — Neil Cohen

AN UNLIKELY CRUSADER

Herzl Caspi, 60, isn't who you would expect to be the typical candidate to go after some of the country's biggest and most powerful companies. After all, for 22 years, he worked for one.

Gray-haired and bespectacled, the Tel Aviv-born, fourth-generation Israeli and Hebrew University graduate was the legal adviser to Koor Industries for more than two decades.

After leaving Koor and setting out into private practice — he is currently with the firm Barzel and Co. — he began to explore the newly opened field of class action. "When I looked around at how things are managed in the securities market, I saw that a lot of things are dealt with in a way that is not in the best interests of the little people, the small investors."

"This work is something personally gratifying for me. I like to protect the interests of big firms. Because of this, I know a lot about how big firms work. So I decided that it was time to be on the other side and protect the small investors as opposed to the big firms."

He admits that changing his mind was a challenge. "It wasn't so easy for me. If, for a long time, your mind is used to think in a specific way and then you have to see it from another way, it is not so simple, but it is very interesting."

The plaintiff in the majority of his cases so far has been Magen V'Keshet, an investment firm he co-owns that was set up to defend the rights of investors. "I have even used my private name as a plaintiff, because I thought what the majorities are doing for their own benefit is against the interests of the small investor. So someone has to do it — if nothing is done, it will continue."

Now, after several out-of-court settlements, and the first court recognition of class actions, he believes he has reached the point where he will be able to find other plaintiffs willing to lead a class action, and Magen V'Keshet will not continue to appear on legal papers.

But this emerging field of law is not for everyone, he says.

"Dealing in such cases is a lot of work. It is very boring by hours. It is not the kind of work that is very exciting. It is a lot of paperwork and a lot of research."

Everything gets old, it's just that some places look more run-down than others, especially areas where the population is old and the quality of building is poor.

This year, the Housing Ministry has allocated NIS 104 million for neighborhood renewal. The project is expected to help 900,000 residents in 133 neighborhoods across the country.

Safi Snir, head of the ministry's renewal division, says almost all cities have areas of urban decay, neighborhoods where residents were either born or live because it's cheaper than anywhere else.

"Apartment prices usually plunge 15-20% after a neighborhood is added to the urban renewal project but once the area is renovated, prices go up sharply," says Snir, citing Ramat Hashikma in Ramat Gan as an example.

It took the ministry eight to nine years to develop Ramat Hashikma, which still looks neglected in some places, but is gradually becoming a trendy neighborhood for young couples.

This year, the ministry has added run-down neighborhoods in Eliat, Ashdod, Jerusalem, Rehovot, Bat Yam, Hadara, Tel Aviv, Yirka and Sajur to its list of renewal programs. Each project takes five to seven years to complete.

The renewal project has two major objectives: to minimize social and economic gaps and to increase the standard of living by improving housing conditions and infrastructure.

Snir emphasizes that the projects are carried out in full cooperation with local residents. He says residents' representatives participate in meetings on development plans. However, this is apparently not true in all cases.

In her report issued recently, the State Comptroller criticized the ministry's renewal project in the Ajami neighborhood in Jaffa. The report refers to the government-owned Amidar company's activities in 1992-93, when it managed the project on behalf of the ministry.

"The Ajami neighborhood did not have a steering committee incorporating the residents in activities to renew the neighborhood - physically and socially," the report said.

THE MINISTRY'S physical renewal program has a number of objectives. Together with the Association for Housing Improvement, the ministry renovates apartments owned by the elderly in an attempt to improve their standard of living and increase their self-confidence. By the end of this year, some 6,000 apartments will be renovated. The ministry invests about NIS 7,000 in each apartment.

"Some of the elderly live in an appalling state, their apartments are dark, damp and dangerous. We try to help by placing grids on windows and improving living conditions, such as the bathrooms," says Snir.

The project also focuses on expanding apartments to encourage residents, especially young couples, to stay. Many of the apartments in run-down neighborhoods hoods are very small, ranging from 25 - 75 sq.m.

For expansion, the ministry offers maximum loans of NIS 40,000, 40% in the form of a grant and the remainder at attractive rates.

In addition, the ministry finances planning expenses. The ministry has plans to expand 3,000 apartments this year. "Many of the neighborhoods look neglected because young couples rent property for short periods of time and then move to better areas where apartments are more spacious. In general, people who rent for short periods of time don't care what the building or neighborhood looks like," says Snir.

The ministry is also involved in restoring the exteriors of buildings and improving the municipality's infrastructure, including electricity, telephones, roads, sidewalks, and public parks. By the end of the year, the exterior of 6,600 apartments will be renovated.

▲ THE Housing Ministry plans to market hundreds of apartments in the coming months as part of its Build Your Own Apartment project. A total of 432 apartments are to be sold in Ra'anana, 115 in Kiryat Malachi, and 80 in Netanya. The ministry also has plans to market apartments in Holon, Rosh Ha'ayin, Ramat Hasharon and later in Tel Aviv.

The project is aimed at helping young couples and other people entitled to government housing assistance to buy apartments at prices significantly cheaper than the market price. For example, in Rosh Ha'ayin, Holon and Rishon LeZion apartments were sold at 27 percent below the market price.

▲ REAL estate prices in Tel Aviv, Gush Dan, the Krayot and Haifa fell in the first quarter of 1995 despite a 2.7% increase in the housing index, according to the Central Bureau of Statistics.

In the reported period, the average price of two- and three-room apartments fell by NIS 2,000 in the fourth quarter of 1994.

The average price of all apartments in Tel Aviv dropped 3% in the first quarter, to NIS 567,000. Apartment prices in the Krayot and Haifa also dropped, to an average price of NIS 305,100.

Three-and-a-half-room and four-room apartments in Tel Aviv registered a 9% drop in prices in the first quarter of the year, to an average of NIS 740,500. In the Gush Dan area the average price fell to NIS 532,700 from NIS 539,400.

▲ EVERGREEN Capital Markets claims housing prices are on a downward trend based on a survey of 30 public construction companies since the start of the year. The drop reflects the fall in the stock market, the public's feeling that there is less money in the economy and potential buyers' expectations that prices will fall. The economists forecast demand for housing to fall in 1995, especially among high-income earners. The company said contractors are willing to give a 7% discount on apartments which are bought for cash.

▲ LUKI Development and Building has sold 84 of the 114 apartments available in the Ahum Kramin neighborhood it is building in Karmiel. The company is building three- and four-room apartments, including duplex apartments. The company said it has 30 duplex apartments left for sale, at a starting price of $125,000.

▲ THE annual yield on rented offices in Tel Aviv has increased in the last six months to 8.5-9% from 8%, according to Maldan, the association of real estate agents. Maldan says the increase reflects the rise in interest rates in 1994, which had a significant influence on the real estate market at the start of this year.

GIVE DIESEL A CHANCE

By Joel Gordin

I tossed the sleek, white car into a Tel Aviv filling station. An attendant waved me in the direction of the pump dispensing lead-free gas.

I shook my head. "Where's the solar [diesel] pump?" I asked.

A furious argument developed. He refused to accept that the auto I was driving was diesel-powered. "I am not going to be held responsible for wrecking your auto," he snarled.

I duly convinced him by showing him the car's registration papers, on which was clearly written "diesel engine."

"There's a mistake," he muttered, listening to the gentle purr of the big engine.

He can easily be forgiven. Most motorists are still convinced diesel engines smell, shake, roar and emit huge clouds of black smoke.

Only eight diesel-powered passenger automobiles were sold to private buyers in 1994 despite the low cost of local diesel fuel and the economy of the diesel engine. In fact, until 1993 it was illegal to use diesel engines in private cars here because they were thought to be noisy, smelly, etc.

This was contrary to the world trend. At least a decade ago European automakers developed clean diesel engines. Three years ago, 40 percent of French cars, for example, were diesel. And in the UK, where diesel is the same price as gasoline, 30 percent of cars are now diesel.

In August 1993, Israel's law against diesel was repealed. However, the Transport Ministry, for reasons known only to itself, slapped a NIS 3,000 tax on any private person who bought a diesel auto. This was canceled about two months ago, but the annual registration fee for a diesel engine is still about NIS 2,000 higher than on the equivalent gas engine.

Furthermore, because the sales of diesel engines are so low, the dealers won't lower the cost prices (under the normal laws of supply and demand). Diesel cars are still an average of at least 10 percent more expensive. Experts reckon that, in spite of the low price of diesel fuel, it's only economical for an Israeli to buy a diesel-powered car if that automobile will be driven more than about 30,000 km. a year.

This is a pity, because there are tremendous advantages to diesel, both for the private consumer and for the community.

Diesel not only costs 40 percent of the price of gas, but a diesel engine uses, on average, 30 percent less fuel.

Diesel engines have less working parts and thus last years longer than gasoline engines. This is the reason they were originally used in forklift trucks, bulldozers, ships, trains and buses. The average diesel engine can easily surpass 50,000km. without breakdowns. The average gasoline engine is good for only half of this.

And, contrary to its image, diesel is less of a pollutant than

Many people are under the impression that diesel and gasoline engines are the same mechanism, and that only the fuel they use is different. But the diesel engine, invented in 1882 by Rudolf Diesel, a French-born German, depends on pressure and not on plugs to ignite the low-octane diesel fuel in the combustion chamber. As a result of the diesel burning system's efficiency, a diesel engine burns less fuel per kilometer and therefore emits less pollutants.

The main reason for the rapid development of the diesel engine during the past decade was the European manufacturers' search for ways to ease pollution.

Diesels generate less horsepower, and less speed, than comparable gas engines. For example, the 1,900cc Peugeot generates 80hp less than even a 1,600cc Peugeot. This would curb the tendency of many irresponsible drivers - especially young drivers - to speed.

Naturally, the relatively low performance of the diesel is one of the reasons why not everybody will buy it. However, nobody expects to sell diesel-powered cars to performance freaks. The market is those who want a vehicle to take them from A to B as safely, as cheaply and as comfortably as possible.

Diesel-powered vehicles would, in fact, be ideal for an institution like the IDF. Beside all the other advantages, the army quartermasters would not need to supply two different kinds of fuel for the trucks and tanks, etc and for the staff cars (which currently run on gas).

However, the IDF is a conservative body. Its spokesperson would only say that the ordinance branch is "investigating the matter."

It's possible that diesel cars could be introduced to the public by way of company fleets. Drivers may lose their prejudices against diesel cars if they see them on the roads. However, it is difficult to see employees agreeing to accept diesel cars until the negative stereotypes are broken. The vicious circle remains tightly closed.

THE ICING ON THE CAKE

Peugeot 306 1.9 diesel
Engine: 1,905cc, four cylinders.
Horsepower: 80 at 6,000rpm.
Gear: manual (5 plus 1)
Maximum speed: 158 kph.
Acceleration: 0-100 kph in 16.1 sec.
Average fuel consumption: 16.2 l/km
Price: NIS 82,100

Local Peugeot/Citroen dealer David Lubinsky and Co. hopes to become the leader in diesel passenger cars, if the idea catches on here as it has in Europe. Lubinsky recently offered journalists the opportunity to test drive some of its diesel models.

The 306 1.9-liter diesel, which I tested, must be compared not to a 1.9 gasoline auto, but to its horsepower equivalent, the 306 1,600cc gasoline. Despite the general belief that it is cumbersome, the diesel engine is only 40kg. heavier than an equivalent gasoline engine.

Apart from the engine, the 1.9 diesel is exactly the same car as the 1.6 gas, with the same accessories - from power steering to electrically controlled windows, air-conditioning and ABS braking system.

The Peugeot 306 1.9 diesel, good looks and fuel economy.

Thanks to the excellent chassis, which gives excellent roadholding, it's always a pleasure to drive a Peugeot 306, and the diesel version is no exception. The only time the naked ear can detect the sound of diesel is when the engine is started up, before the revs build up.

Lubinsky cannot yet offer diesel passenger cars with automatic shift. The manual shift changes smoothly but diesels do not function as well as gasoline at high revs, which means the 1.9 must be taken fast through at least the first and second gears. The engine then settles down well until you want to settle high speeds, when, again, a certain sluggishness is noticeable.

The 1.9 diesel's acceleration and maximum speed figures don't compare well with those of the 1.6 gasoline: 16.9 sec. compared to 12.9 sec.; 158 kph compared to

On the other hand, its fuel consumption statistics are the icing on the cake. On a full tank of diesel fuel I traveled at least 1,000km. The tank holds 60 liters, which means I was getting an average of 16.6 km/l in difficult test conditions. A liter of diesel today costs 98 agorot so the 1,000km cost NIS 59.

The 306 gasoline version has an average of about 10km/l. If a liter of 96 octane costs NIS 2.24, then 1,000 kilometer costs NIS 224.

The 306 1.9 diesel costs NIS 82,100 - NIS 5,000 more than the 1.6 gasoline.

Lubinsky can also offer those who want to take the plunge into diesel a 405 model with a 1,905cc engine for NIS 88,000. The gas equivalent, the 1.6 liter 405 with the same standard of finish, costs NIS 78,900.

Maria Ewing: "You have to be believable on stage."

Soprano Maria Ewing, who sings the title role in the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden, production of 'Carmen' here, insists opera is not divorced from real life.

By Michael Ajzenstadt

Operatic myths

THERE are many myths about opera, but it seems that soprano Maria Ewing—who will sing the title role in the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden, production of Carmen as part of the Israel Festival—is determined to destroy them all.

Speaking from her home in England, the 45-year-old Detroit native takes on the myths one by one: the division between sopranos and mezzos; the precedence music takes over all else in opera; the gaps between opera and real life, and between prima donnas and real people.

Regardless of whether a singer is classified as a soprano or mezzo, Ewing says, her ability to perform a role is more than singing what's in the score. "It's not just if you are capable of singing the role [that's important], but also make it come to life. I like nature to take its course rather than to have somebody superimpose an idea of what I'm capable of doing.... I believe in fate and my own abilities."

Among Ewing's abilities is acting, which she considers absolutely essential. "You have to be believable on stage," she says. "It requires all the elements to be right. You have to sing it, but in my view you have to be physically right, too. If you don't look the role, then you can perform it in a concert version or recording and bring it alive through the voice alone. But when sitting in an opera house, I want to believe [in an opera character] on all levels, to be convinced theatrically."

That's what Ewing, one of the most exciting opera stars today, strives to accomplish. In portraying the starry-eyed 15-year-old protagonist in Madama Butterfly, for example, "It's not difficult to imagine, whether you are 15 or 45. If you know what love is, then you know and you can project that, and that's what you feel from within. [My] job is not to convince the audience but to believe and experience it myself, and then those experiences are shared."

Which brings Ewing to yet another misconception: that opera is divorced from everyday life. "The stage is real life. If not, then what's the whole purpose?"

MOST OF the heroines Ewing portrays die at the end of the opera. Is that real life too? "What subject is the strongest and the most vital to us all, if not love? You can die for love; the feelings are always there. Whether or not you take that step is another matter."

Just as opera reflects real life, prima donnas themselves are "real" people. "I try to live a normal life; wake up, go shopping, worry about my child [from her marriage to acclaimed English director Sir Peter Hall, from whom she was divorced in 1989], have a normal day-to-day experience," she says. "The worlds of divas and prima donnas—what does all that mean? It means something... serious and complicated which drains you and rewards you tremendously and psychologically."

Ewing is intent on keeping her onstage parts separate from her offstage roles. But she says there are a lot of similarities between them.

"Both have great moments of great happiness, both have obstacles, both have moments of great understanding, compassion, happiness and unhappiness."

The world of opera, as with classical music in general, suffers from a surplus of superficiality.

"They can be very pretentious," she says. "It should not be like this and it's not always, because it's a very serious business and it requires everything of your whole being, not just vocal and technical requirements, which are already difficult enough."

"You have to do your job whatever difficulties are facing you, and you are utterly, utterly exposed. It's a serious job, but it's also so beautiful and exhilarating when the elements are right."

More often than not, the elements are indeed right.

"Many times, even if the conditions around you are not what they should be, you can go into your own world" by concentrating solely on her own performance. "I believe every element in the production means something, not just the lover on stage. Everyone in my view, from supers on stage holding a spear or a torch—the image of that person registers, it affects. And it's all these things that bother me. Otherwise, I'm not happy with the production."

The most important thing is not necessarily to argue about the singer's point of view or that of the director. "You want to make real music, make the real thing come to life. It's not your idea or his [the director's] idea. It's the idea of the work."

Among the directors with whom she likes to work best are Peter Hall, John Dexter, Steven Pimlott and Graham Vick, "probably one of the best opera directors in the world."

EWING, WHO will be portraying Carmen at Jerusalem's Sutan's Pool, has worked in the open air before and likes the feeling of "the breeze and seeing the sky above me."

"I absolutely think open-air productions are as convincing as those in an opera house."

"The conditions don't have to deter from the ultimate effect of theater. I know acoustics might interfere, the weather may interfere and technicalities can affect the experience. And, yes, if you can't see me or hear me, it's wrong and it's not my fault."

Although she has sung Carmen many times, she has no set formula for the role. "Ideally, nothing should become stale; it should renew itself in one way or another," Ewing says.

"The basic feeling is probably the same, but my life changes all the time, so my portrayal will undoubtedly be different in some way too, but I don't know how. I did it two years ago, and you don't forget those roles. It's like people in your life you never forget."

Carmen is scheduled to be performed on June 6-8 and 10-12.

A Universal Mother

'Universal Mother' is the work of a woman fighting for her sanity. Much of its content was reportedly composed as she felt "mental" to the point of thoughts of suicide.

Sinead O'Connor's demonstrative gestures annoyed Americans and Catholics, but here tickets for her concerts are selling so well that a third show may be necessary. Her latest album, 'Universal Mother,' is as close to the bone as music gets.

By Tirzah Agassi

Irish singer Sinead O'Connor is a genius with a knack for alienating audiences. At the Vatican she is about as beloved as St. Joan on the day of her burning.

Here, however, she is so popular that Caesarea's Roman Amphitheater and Jerusalem's Sutan's Pool will not be big enough to hold all her fans next month. Attempts are being made to book her for a third concert.

Local audiences are unfazed by her notorious gestures. (She tore up a picture of the pope on the American TV show Saturday Night Live and refused to go onstage in New Jersey if the US national anthem was played.)

People in this country listen to her music and like what they hear. Her fourth recording, Universal Mother (NMC), which will provide most of the content of her shows, sold well here despite several features that put a dampener on its mass appeal.

Internationally, the album's opening cut, in which feminist Germaine Greer lectures that it is women who must transform the world from a patriarchy to a fraternity, and the harsh MTV video Fire On Babylon, which rallied against child abuse, turned audiences off.

Here the album was a commercial success. And the press, which O'Connor lives to hate, is more than likely to give her a heroine's welcome. Israeli listeners applaud the courage it takes to be loudly different.

A HANDFUL of interviews given when Universal Mother was released last summer reveal a 27-year-old struggling to maintain her integrity while baring her soul. Universal Mother is as close to the bone as music gets. It is the work of a woman fighting for her sanity. Much of its content was reportedly composed as she felt "mental" to the point of thoughts of suicide.

Fortunately, her self-therapy is free of all traces of cliché. In fact, it is brilliantly original.

In the song "A Perfect Indian," O'Connor refers to the fairy tale of the children of Lir, the king of Ireland. When their mother died in childbirth, Lir married her sister, who was so jealous of the four children that she turned them into lonely swans with beautiful voices. The album swells with images and music as primeval as this fairy tale.

Yet O'Connor, who has been through extensive psychotherapy, can step back and analyze both her compositions and the psychological processes they reflect with remarkable clarity.

She relates the story of Lir's children to her own family. O'Connor claims she was beaten by her mother with a violence that had sexual overtones, and her father ran away.

What is so stunning about this recording is the immediacy with which she reclaims her humanity. Sometimes, as in "Fire On Babylon," which blasts with a driving rhythm track against abuse. But more often than not, the songs are pure and acoustic as they coax both her wounded self and the listener beyond the limitations of the past: "I let tears fall like rain/Apple sized they were.... There's life outside your mother's garden/There's life beyond your wildest dreams."

At times the recording turns into a home movie, with her seven-year-old son Jake contributing a touching song of his own in which he too wonders about being human. It takes great courage to offer up such personal material to the acid test of the hit parade.

Israelis have wondered about the inclusion of the Star of David on the cover, which features a rather good drawing by

In "Famine," she pulls out the stops with a psychosocial-historical and spiritual rant that some will call hogwash and others will embrace as the truth. For all her passion, O'Connor did her homework before composing this work of oral "her-story."

In an interview provided by her record company, she quotes full pages from a book by Jack O'Brien called British Brutality in Ireland, which claims that, during the famine of some 150 years ago, not only did the British export food from the island as millions of Irish starved, but the Church also continued to insist on collecting rent from tenants who could not afford to feed themselves.

O'CONNOR LIKENS her countrymen's "amnesia" about this to her repression of the violence she endured in childhood, and goes so far as to draw parallels between her bouts of "madness" and the many torments of a homeland which she sees as being enveloped by a cloud of pain. Her aim is to wake others up using her example.

This may not be everybody's cup of tea. But this writer can think of no other recording artist with the sheer guts to attempt a project of such breathtaking ambition. It is an unprecedented attempt at mass education and mass healing.

O'Connor is not the hysterical enfant terrible that she has been made out to be. Though her theses might take a bit of a drubbing in the hands of a dry doctorate-review committee, she is nonetheless a noteworthy intellectual theoretician who is capable of examining her subject from a variety of angles.

On the one hand, she admits that the pope whom she symbolically tore apart is a surrogate for her father (who is apparently horrified by her disclosures about her dead mother's violence and his failure to protect his offspring).

On the other, she provides a papal document dated 1171 in which Pope Adrian sanctioned the English invasion of Ireland and the centuries of oppression which followed. Suffice it to say that the Church does not emerge in a good light.

O'Connor is dedicated to raising consciousness.

She must have been gratified by a letter from an Israeli clinical psychologist providing evidence of her success in using her experience to inspire others. In a letter to NMC, which the company forwarded to O'Connor, he explained that a number of women recovering from childhood abuse had requested that a poster of O'Connor be hung in his consulting room.

O'Connor can be sure of an enthusiastic audience here. And we are likely to be rewarded with some spectacular, heart-felt performances.

Not recommended for children.)

BOYS ON THE SIDE - Three pretty women (Whoopi Goldberg, Mary-Louise Parker and Drew Barrymore) drive across the country. Along the way they laugh, hug, cry, reveal their deepest hopes and fears and paint each other's toenails. Herbert Ross's movie wears its marketing strategy on its sleeve. This goosy rehash of other girl-buddy movies is less concerned with exploring the unique connections between its female characters than it is with ensuring that the greatest number of female moviegoers will make dates to buy tickets with their best friends. (English dialogue, Hebrew subtitles. Parental guidance strongly suggested.)

BULLETS OVER BROADWAY - Oxymoronic as it may sound, Woody Allen's new movie is a perfect moral trifle. Small, funny and wise, the film easily blends the gentle frivolity of the director's mature comic pictures with the heftier existentialist conundrums he posed in solemn mixed bags like Interiors and Criminals and Misdeeds. John Cusack stars as an idealistic young playwright. Bullets is Allen's most relaxed and thoughtful creation in years. (English dialogue, Hebrew subtitles. Parental guidance strongly suggested.)

DEATH AND THE MAIDEN - The most interesting bad movie of the year, Roman Polanski's film is based on Chilean exile Ariel Dorfman's nervous chamber drama about a victim of police torture (Sigourney Weaver) who confronts the man (Ben Kingsley) she believes raped and brutalized her, years before. Weaver's bearing is so honey and all-American that her raging story seems profoundly personal, almost hormonal. A far better or worse, the film has the ability to snare its audience in the same seductive, repugnant dance as its characters. (English dialogue, Hebrew subtitles. Not recommended for children.)

DUMB AND DUMBER - Though it's hard to make claims for the subtlety of a film whose jokes center around such stuff as extra-strength laxatives and dead parakeets, the creators of the Jim Carrey vehicle at least grasp the concept of irony. The movie is less than half-witted, but it's also self-aware, which may be a dubious compliment, the rough equivalent of commending a drunken sloth for being so considerate about where he vomits. (English dialogue, Hebrew subtitles. Parental guidance suggested.)

FORREST GUMP - In case you haven't heard, Robert Zemeckis's smash-hit movie features a down-home, half-wit hero who triumphs over several decades of American civil unrest by doing just what his name tells him and refusing to ask questions. At the most basic level, the film is a shameless paean to passivity and even ignorance, but what saves the picture from this frighteningly low-brow scheme - in other words, from itself - is genuine good will, combined with the director's lively imagination and fluid compositional sense. Light and sweetly spun as a wad of cotton candy, the film derives its buoyant forward momentum and hyperbolic good humor from the winding disquisitions of its title character, played by a crew-cut Tom Hanks. (English dialogue, Hebrew subtitles. Parental guidance suggested.)

FOUR WEDDINGS AND A FUNERAL - Crisp as a freshly pressed tuxedo shirt, English director Mike Newell's film works wonders with nostalgia and white tulle. Not only does Four Weddings capture the airy, bubble-bath quality of a 1940s romantic comedy, it also updates the catty sexual palter that marked the best of, say, Lubitsch and Mankiewicz. In the lead, oh-so-English Hugh Grant is a bashful, gangly delight: he's all Adam's apple. And MacDowell is also likable as the American clothes-horse who trots away with his heart. (English dialogue, Hebrew subtitles. Not recommended for children.)

MIAMI RHAPSODY - It's surely no coincidence that young writer-director David Frankel cast Mia Farrow in his first movie, a thin but likable Woody Allen imitation. Farrow isn't really the focus of this romantic comedy, but she does establish an obvious bloodline between Allen's later films and the movie at hand, which also uses episodic flashbacks to relate frustrated sexual encounters, high-pitched family squabbles and torrid extramarital tumbles, set to splashy Big Band music. With Sarah Jessica Parker and Antonio Banderas. (English dialogue, Hebrew subtitles. Parental guidance suggested.)

NOBODY'S FOOL - Based on a novel by Richard Russo, Robert Benton's movie takes an Oprah Winfrey-style discussion topic - Men Who Can't Face Responsibility - and cloaks it in the earnest, academic terms that a literate audience is supposed to lap up. Benton's script lacks the loud-mouth grandstanding of mid-day American TV, but it's also missing Oprah's verve. For all its muted lighting and restrained humor, the movie really isn't any smarter or more honest than one of those mass-market therapy sessions, although it is a good deal more boring. Paul Newman plays a cranky construction worker with a bum knee and a bum personal history. (English dialogue, Hebrew subtitles. Not recommended for children.)

OUTBREAK - Fast-paced, smart, and camp as a thriller could be, Wolfgang Petersen's film packs the same scary, funny punch of an old-fashioned horror movie. And as the Blobs of the '50s drew from Cold War phobias about nuclear war and the invasion of alien (Soviet?) forces, Outbreak deftly taps what must be the most primal terror in American culture these days - the fear of AIDS - and turns it into a capricious drama. A Jewish Hoffman stomps and limes as a principled army doctor determined to beat a killer virus. Rene Russo is his pretty ex-wife and co-worker, and Morgan Freeman is a military commander with stern expressions. (English dialogue, Hebrew subtitles. Children under 17 not admitted without an adult.)

PULP FICTION - The winner of this year's Palme d'Or at Cannes, Quentin Tarantino's film is a rich, funny, violent, oddly earnest tour de force, made up of a framing story and three discrete tales of seamy gangster life. In a conceit borrowed from Robert Altman and/or Charles Dickens, the various characters wander in and out of each others' episodes, sometimes as principals, sometimes passersby. Their close brushes and occasional collisions imply an entire universe. The young writer-director obviously enjoys the challenge that these familiar situations and typical noir formulas provide: his talent lies in his ability to search out the heart of the oldest setup and pump it full of adrenaline. With John Travolta, Bruce Willis, Uma Thurman, Samuel L. Jackson and others. (English dialogue, Hebrew subtitles. Children under 17 not admitted without an adult.)

lightful chronicle of a gay Sydney cabaret act's journey across the Australian wilderness. Appropriately enough for a picture about cross-dressing, Priscilla derives its wacky ebullience from the seeming opposites it dares combine. As the dignified transsexual Bernice, Terence Stamp manages to endow even impending seediness with a kind of aristocratic grace. He also looks good in lipstick. (English dialogue, Hebrew subtitles. Not recommended for children.)

AMATEUR - A stylized parody of the self-discovery quest - Horner, Pirandello or pop-psychological - Amateur is by far the most satisfying of writer-director Hal Hartley's creations to date. Fresh and affectionate, the film takes shape with the out-of-body frisson of one of the pornographic stories written by Isabelle (Isabelle Huppert), a freckle-faced ex-nun who claims to be both a nymphomaniac and a virgin. Perhaps the most typical character in Hartley's weird menagerie, Isabelle swaps enigmatic one-liners here with a genial amnesiac and a naive porno star. (English dialogue, Hebrew subtitles. Not recommended for children.)

BEFORE SUNRISE - Two beautiful strangers meet on a train from Budapest. He's American and must catch a plane for home at dawn; she's French and heading back to her studies at the Sorbonne. On a whim, he persuades her to disembark in Vienna and spend the night wandering with him throughout the stately city. At first glance, the simple outline of this Richard Linklater film resembles that of a classic shipboard or sleeper-car romance. But Jesse (Ethan Hawke) and Celine (Julie Delpy) are scrappier, modern sweethearts, and their discussions sound more dorm room than stateroom. (English dialogue, Hebrew subtitles.)

JERUSALEM

STUDENT THEATER FESTIVAL - Free performances by student theater departments and schools. (Gerard Behar Center, Mon. and Tues.)

WHITE NIGHTS - Original play based on the life of Dostoevsky. (Habama, Sat., Sun. and Tues., 8)

TEL AVIV AREA

AUTOSTRADA - Written by Ben Avner Hecht, directed by Dor Pless. The story of two Israeli couples in search of happiness, success and wealth. (Old Jaffa, Hasmita, Wed., 9:30)

CHILD'S PLAY - Two newcomers to Tel Aviv are let down by what the big city has to offer until they meet up with Mr. Success. By Omer Knipsel, directed by Efraim Seldoff. With Dorit Nital, Vlodja Friedman, Doron Tsafir, Tender and charming. (Old Jaffa, Hasmita, Mon., 9 & 8:12:12)

THE CHINESE - Murray Schlegel's comedy about a young man who does not resemble his Chinese parents and hides his identity from his

Jewish fiancée. Directed by Niko Nital. (Old Jaffa, Hasmita, tonight, 10 & 8:12:12)

CONVERSATIONS WITH MY FATHER - Joint Beit Lissin-Haifa Theater production, directed by Hy Kalus. Amusing play about a Jewish family trying to make it in America. A touching Jewish-American drama ruled by incongruous casting and awkward directing. (Ra'anana, Yad Lebanim, Sat., 9)

CYPRUS - Israeli play written by Yonatan Gefen about a couple going through a divorce. (ZOA House, Sat., 8:30; Wed., 8:30)

THE FALL - One-man play based on Camus's novel about the hypocrisy of society. Adapted and performed by Niko Nital. (Old Jaffa, Hasmita, Tues., 9:30)

FUNNY MONEY - Comedy about a man who finds a suitcase full of money. Tight direction, a wit-knit team of gifted comedy actors plus a hilarious script make this comedy of endless errors one of the most entertaining, wholesome shows of the season. (Jaffa, Noga Theater, tonight, 10)

HAMETZ - Written by Shmuel Hasfari. A bleak look at what Israel has become. A powerful play, superbly directed and acted by an all-star cast, spells promise of a renaissance of great Hebrew theater.

THEATER

One of the most outstanding dramas to have hit our stage in years. (Eretz Yisrael Museum, tonight, 8:30; Sat., 9 & 8:42:20:59)

HAPPY DAYS - Studio Thy 81 - Theater Miriam adaptation of Samuel Beckett's play. In English. (Bikur Holim, 8 Heftman, Tues., 9 & 8:19:51:10)

INDEPENDENCE - The brother of a fallen soldier is due for call-up and his kibbutznik parents have the option to release him from combat service. (Old Jaffa, Hasmita, Tues., 9 & 8:25:22:29)

NAOMI - Award-winning monodrama with Ruby Fort about Bedouin women. (Cameri, Sat., 8)

OLEANNA - Modern thriller written by David Mamet about rape and the use of power. A subtle sat and heated acting carry a doubtful case of sexual harassment to a dramatic climax. (Tzavta, Sat., 8; Sun., 8:30; Wed., 10 a.m.)

P.S. YOUR CAT IS DEAD - A joint Yuval Theater and Habimah production. A comedy about an unemployed actor who is down on his luck. (Habimah, Thurs., 8:30)

POLLARD - THE PATRIOTS - Story by Motti Lerner about Jonathan Pollard. Starring Shuly Rand. Possibly compelling as political propaganda. Flashy, fast-moving scenario works as animated documentary though fragmented as drama. Some good acting but pretentious and quibbly mosaic of hysteric heroics falls short of any promise of a great play. (Cameri, Sat., 8; Sun., Wed., 8:30; Wed., 4:30 & 6:22:35:35)

SHIRAZ LEVIN IS DEAD AND LIVING IN TEL AVIV - Monodrama. (ZOA House, tonight, 10)

TOUCH WOOD - Story of a soldier and his friend during the Yom Kippur War. Lively declaiming of a tenuous text that intermittently grips with the sense of the soldier in action. (Tzavta 2, Tues., 8)

TRIO IN A FLAT - Eric Rohmer's drama on the age-old theme of youth and romance. (Old Jaffa, Hasmita, Sat., 8:30 & 8:25:22:29)

A TWIT TO LUNCH - Written by Francis Webber. (Beit Lissin, tonight, 9:30; Sat., 9; Sun. and Mon., 8:30 & 8:57:58:58)

YENTL - A monodrama in English. Studio Thy 81 adaptation of Isaac Bashevis Singer's short story.

'The Millionaire from Naples' at the Haifa Theater.

directed by Geza Partosh. (Bikur Holim, 6 Heftman, today, 2:30 & 8:19:51:10)

HAIFA

THE MILLIONAIRE FROM NAPLES - An ambitious production worth watching for the magnificent performance of Gita Munte in the name-part. (Theater, Wed. and Thurs., 8:30)

MONTERRAT - Haifa Theater production directed by Vardit Shaif. Set in 19th-century Venezuela during the struggle for independence from Spain. (Stage 2, Wed., 11 a.m.)

A SERVANT WITH TWO MASTERS - Golden's comedy of errors starring Shmuel Vilosny. A Habimah production directed by Omri Nilzen. A sick and uproariously funny rendering of Golden's masterpiece (Theater, Sat.-Mon., 8:30)

BEERSHEBA AND SOUTH

FUNNY MONEY - See T.A. (Eilat, Wed., 8)

OTHER LOCALES

CONVERSATIONS WITH MY FATHER - See T.A. (Beit Sheva, Kimron, Mon., 8:30; Afula, Haifa, Haterbut, Tues., 8; Wed., 8; Thurs., 8)

EDUCATING RITA - Touching comedy about the relationship between a despondent English professor and a working-class woman with a desire to educate herself. A witty, caustic comedy. But despite bright performances by two accomplished actors somehow no convincing chemistry is sparked off between them. (Yotv, Tues., 8:30)

FUNNY MONEY - See T.A. (Afula, Haifa, Haterbut, Sat., 8:30)

A FUNNY THING HAPPENED ON THE WAY TO THE FORUM - Comedy directed by Miki Gurevich. In this hilarious musical comedy, a young man is mistaken for a famous actor and must deal with the consequences. (Haifa, Haterbut, Sun. and Mon., 8; Tiberias, Haifa, Haterbut, Tues. and Wed., 8:30)

HAMETZ - See T.A. (Karmiel, Haifa, Haterbut, Sun.-Thurs., 8)

THE MERCHANTS OF GLORY - Political parable written by Marcel Pagnol, directed by Itzik Weingarten. Set in 1918 about a man who ends up a government minister following the death of his son. (Afula, Mon., 8)

THE TIGER - TheaterNetto 1994. Solo performance by Rami Banach-Dario. Po's play, directed by Avi Dayan. (Afula, Haifa, Haterbut, Sun., 9; Bar'am, Mon., 8)

Please note: All material for listing in The Poster should arrive in writing at the Jerusalem Post offices no later than midday on Sunday prior to publication date.

Bob Dylan was right. The times they are a-changin', thanks to shows like Ren and Stimpy. So much for cartoons being soft little stories about cats and ducks and wabbits. I couldn't understand why my sister's kids loved Ren and Stimpy till I watched The Ren and Stimpy Show on the Children's Channel (Friday, 2:30 p.m.). No wonder kids love it. There was a scene where Ren thought he'd met the Rapunzel of his dreams. She leans out of the tower and he begins to climb up what turns out to be her nose hair. That's what the show is all about: nose hairs and snot and tongue-tur and detachable eyeballs that dissolve.

Barry Norman was staying well away from the children and sunning himself at Cannes in this week's Film 95 (BBC World, 5:25 p.m., Saturday), where he also revealed a new side to himself. He was attending the Cannes Film Festival and managed to wangle an early morning interview with Quentin Tarantino on the beach, complete with deckchairs and parasols and beads of sweat. Norman, usually dry as a Saudi cocktail bar, positively gushed in front of his hero. Tarantino, gushy forever, gushed back with so much energy that before he'd finished one sentence he'd start, because he has so many thoughts all crowding in at the like when he gets them while he's, or at the Sundance Festival when, because that's where Bruce Willis asked about, it was on the beach.

Norman on the beach, was so in tune with Tarantino that he could follow every word and knew exactly what Tarantino was babbling about. I confess I did too. It was as if Tarantino was talking in keywords. All he had to say was "Mr. Pink" and anyone who'd seen Reservoir Dogs would be transported back to the first time they saw the movie and heard the argument about why no one could be Mr. Black. Tarantino knows how to press the right buttons, and Barry Norman loves having his buttons pressed.

THE NANNY came back this week for comedy night, the Family Channel's challenge to Channel 2's powerful Monday night line-up. The comedies include Mad About You and Seinfeld, and from next week Married with Children. I missed Mad About You to watch the end of an American film with a sad ending, I missed Seinfeld because I'm tired of seeing them all running around doing nothing but fishing stories out of thin air. But I caught The Nanny who in half an hour made up for the hour of comedies I'd missed.

Fran Drescher came back for the second series with a loud Brooklyn bang. As Nanny Fran Fine, she discovered that her employer Mr. Sheffield was the third most eligible bachelor in America and decided to fix him up with someone. At first she tried with her friend Valerie, to whom she described him as, "He's handsome, he's rich - all right, he's 42. But he's a nice man, a good catch. True? True!" Since discretion is not the better part of Valerie, she found himself a nice Jewish lawyer when he, Fran and Valerie went clubbing in his limo. (The girls had told him to pretend he wasn't with them, so he got into the club while they sat outside watching the rich and famous, sucking the jelly out of doughnuts.)

The girl he met, Leslie, was exactly, but exactly like Nanny Fran. Same gaudy clothes, same grating accent, same interests, same big hair, even the same shoe size. Everybody noticed the likeness except Mr. Sheffield (who thought she was just like Connie Sellecca) and Nanny Fran (who thought she was just like Audrey Hepburn). The mixture of comic set-ups and slight-gags came fast and furious. But when it comes to puns the best one was not on a comedy but an entertainment news show on CNN (Sunday, 11:30 a.m.). Bill Tush signed off from Showbiz This Week with: "As they say in the limousine business, 'That's the chauffeur this week.'"

Which takes us neatly into a show about Israeli drivers. No, it's not a comedy. It's a new drama series on the Family Channel called The Meter Is Running (Channel 3, Tuesday, 9:50 p.m.). It started (10 minutes late) with our hero "driving" in a mock-up taxi, smiling to himself as he eavesdrops on other people's conversations. Great action. He doesn't move, he doesn't speak, he doesn't get to see the people who do. But the show improved as it went along. We met three strange fares (a weeping woman, a gang of rowdies, and another weeping woman), two colleagues, his grumpy wife and his daughter. And all this in the space of a single 25-minute episode. I'd say that's action-packed. I'd say it might be stuffing too many tales into one taxi, but it did zip along.

It also helped me to realize what it is I hate about most Israeli dramas: It's the flowery philosophizing. In The Meter Is Running there were comments about the night being like the ocean and the marina being a place for romance. Yes, yes, lovely thoughts. But what do they mean? The ocean is full of sewage - and so is the marina for that matter, but I doubt if that's what they were referring to. You're supposed to ask the meaning. You're supposed to shut up and listen and ponder and come up with, "Ah, deep!" Deep sewage.

In real life nobody makes such vacuous observations and actually means it. Nor do they speak so frothily.

Except on Educational TV which has been putting a lot of effort into its English-language programs. It has hired whole teams of writers and actors and musical arrangers.

It's also hired a PR company to send out glossy promo packs about the educational consultants, the theory of audio-visual English, and the various writers and actors and musical arrangers.

In this week's Seven in Heaven (the show I'd watch just for Eddy the Thinking Dog), Danny took the lead in the school play, a musical in Restoration costumes and powdered wigs.

"Look, how beautiful is the spring!" proclaimed the cast poetically in chorus.

"And all I could think about was an entire generation of Israelis speaking in flowery English, for-soothing and their sentences inverting."
